Focal seizures with left hemibody piloerection related to left hemisphere cavernous angiomas

Benjamin P. Whatley\textsuperscript{1}, Cory Jubenville\textsuperscript{1}, David B. Clarke\textsuperscript{2}, R. Mark Sadler\textsuperscript{1}

\textsuperscript{1}Dalhousie University Division of Neurology, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada
\textsuperscript{2}Dalhousie University Division of Neurosurgery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada

Key words: focal epilepsy; epilepsy surgery; hippocampal sclerosis; neuropathology.

Correspondence: bwhatley@dal.ca

For details visit the Multimedia Teaching Material/Neuroimaging Section of the website www.epilepticdisorders.com

Figure 1. Ictal semiology included left hemibody piloerection with retained awareness.

Figure 2. MRI revealed the presence of several cavernous angiomas with typical “pop-corn” appearance, involving the left temporal pole and left gyrus rectus.